Interpretive Naturalist Dorothy McLeer will visit the library to talk about Michigan's bald eagle population. She'll talk about how the number of breeding pairs of bald eagles in Michigan, after being threatened with extinction, has rebounded significantly during the past decade. She will also talk about how bald eagles can be seen here in the Dearborn area. McLeer has over thirty years of experience of teaching talent as the Interpretive Naturalist for the University of Michigan-Dearborn. Funding is provided by The Zohar Ben-Dov Family through the Luminescence Foundation.
